LENNOX FAIR

HELD AT NAPANEE, SEPT. 11TH, 12TH AND 13TH.

HIS HONOR LIEUT-GOVERNOR COL. H. COCKSHUTT, OPENS THE FAIR.

Splendid weather greeted the Fair on Tuesday, the opening day. The morning of the second day looked rather dismal, but the sun came out and the afternoon was splendid, bringing out a big attendance. The third day was somewhat cool.

Tuesday was children's day and on that day all school children were guests of the Fair and were admitted to the grounds free and they enjoyed themselves to the full, even though the promised Midway failed to appear.

The children met at the Armouries, at 1 p.m., and headed by the Boy Scouts and Riders of the Military College, marched to the Fair Grounds.

At the Col. Cockshutt, Lieut-Governor of Ontario, formally opened the exhibition. He was received on a specially built platform tastefully decorated. Mr. W. S. Herrington, K.C., introduced His Honor.

Mr. J. J. Johnstone, President of the Lennox Agricultural Society and Warden of the County, read an address of welcome and presented it to the Lieut-Governor.

Col Cockshutt's address in reply was short, comprehensive and most suitable to the occasion and the sentiments expressed were endorsed by all who heard him. He accentuated the fact that Canada was an agricultural country and was dependent upon the farmers for its prosperity. But he said it must not be overlooked that the other classes of citizens and other industries were necessary to use and manufacture the products produced by the farmers. The community spirit must prevail to produce prosperity.

The entries of Live Stock, Horses, Cattle, Sheep and Pigs, were the largest ever shown in Napanee and the quality of the best. The poultry building was well filled with an excellent showing of birds and attracted large crowds every day.

The motor car exhibit was confined to one line of cars, the McLaughlin. The lack of a building to accommodate cars accounts for the lack of these exhibits, but the Association is not financially able at present to erect a suitable building. No doubt such a building will be provided in due time.

The palace looked bright and gay with floral exhibits, ladies' fancy work, fruit and merchants' display. The booths along both sides of the building were occupied by Haines' Shoe House, Napanee; Mason & Risch, Pianos, etc., Toronto; Fine Art Exhibit; H. VanLuven, Pianos, etc., Napanee; The Robinson Co., Limited, Napanee; Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Health Dept., representative Allan Simpson, Napanee; Home-made Bread, Buns, Cake, Butter and Preserved Fruit, Spencer & Son, Milking Machines, Napanee; Douglas & Co., Napanee, demonstrating Du-Ko Perpetual Vine, Electric Fixtures, Napanee; Arthur A. Sills, Seaman-Kent Hardwood Flooring, Belleville; Hydro Electric Commission, Napanee; The Graham Co., Men's Clothing and Furnishings, Napanee.

BABY SHOW

The event of the evening was the Baby Show, and as always in the past there was a large attendance—only this year the crowd was a little bit bigger. E. J. Sexsmith, M.P., acted as chairman and did it well. The judges were Drs. Gerow, Hon. A. E. Ross, M.P., and Nurse Leeder, head of the Victorian Order of Nurses, Kingston. There were about fifteen babies entered for the contest—only one pair of twins. Following is the pronouncement of the judges:

Best Baby Boy—3 months to 1 year—1st, Marshall A. Rombough; 2nd, Schuyler Smith.

Class for Twins—John Oscar and James Robert Grange.

Best Baby Boy—12 to 18 months—Cameron Ezra Clark.

Best Baby Girls—3 months to 1 year—1st, Annie Marie Smith; 2nd, Ella Whitmarsh.

Best Baby Girl—12 to 18 months—1st, Margaret Young; 2nd, Geneva Walsh.

The enjoyable evening was brought to a close by a fine concert given by Lieut. Betts and company.

A Famous Mystery.

The famous "Glamis Mystery" is one of the best-kept secrets in the world, says the London Chronicle. Endless fantastic stories have been put forward, but the one solid fact among all the rubbish talked is that the castle contains a secret chamber the entrance to which is known only to the earl, his heir, and the factor. Those who say that the mystery is a never-dying monster forget that the secret room is walled up and is visited only once in a generation. Ever monsters must have food and air. The other story, that the wicked sabbath-breaking Earl Patie still plays cards there with the Devil, to whom he staked his soul, is, on the face of it, mere local legend. There is something eerie and unusual about Glamis; but the three who know probably smile at all suggested solutions.

Equally fantastic is the story that the heir, learning the secret when he comes of age, never smiles again. This probably arose when a former Bishop of Brechin, believing the tale about the wicked laird and the Devil, and fancying that the Earl of Strathmore in his day was a haunted and melancholy man, offered his pious services to lay the evil spirit. The earl, it is said, thanked him, but confessed his case beyond mortal help. And so myth is added to myth.

J. M. Barrie and an Upstart.

Sir James Barrie has no use for people who "pass on side." He has a way of his in dealing with them as the following story will show:

The understudy of a certain theatrical star once got a chance to play his part, and, as he was missing no chances, he sent out telegrams to a club frequented by writers and critics and was asked whether he had received his wire. He said that he had and was asked:

"What did you do? I don't suppose you answered it?"

"Yes, I did," replied Sir James. "What did you say?"

"I wired," answered Barrie, "'Thanks for the warning.'"

Acquired Rare Portrait.

One of the rarest engraved portraits of Queen Elizabeth has just been acquired by the trustees of the British Museum. This is the portrait by William Rogers, the earliest title, "Rosa Elecia." Till recently native portrait engraver, bearing the only one impression of this engraving was known to exist, in the Sunderland collection in the Bodleian library at Oxford. The second, now in the British Museum, is derived from the Salt library at Stafford, which possessed a collection of engraved portraits, now dispersed by order of the trustees of that library. The British Museum now possesses all three portraits of Queen Elizabeth engraved by Rogers.

Victory for Cupid.

Weddings in Japan increased in 1922 despite an old superstition that considers the year unlucky. At the Hibiya shrine only, they numbered 300 more than in 1921, but the ceremonies were conducted under the most economical plan.

The Hibiya shrine has six classes of weddings, ranging from 15 to 70 yens. During the war most families desired the first or second class ceremonies, rated 70 or 50 yen, but this year's weddings were generally performed with the pine, bamboo or plum classes, the cost being respectively 25, 20 and 15 yen. Whereas there used to be elaborate receptions and banquets, nowadays invitations are sent out declining wedding gifts in the hope of making the entire affair as simple as possible.

"No pen helps a woman to express her real self, at her best, as I do—no postage stamp travels so fast.

SELF-OILING — SELF-REGULATING
With the Strongest Tower Built

It's the "Toronto" Self-Oiling Windmill—requiring "oil only once a year". All gears operate in a bath of special oil affected by neither heat nor cold—every bearing and working part thoroughly and automatically lubricated.

If you have a "Toronto" Windmill now, you can obtain this self-oiling feature by installing the head and oiling your present wheel. Most Toronto Windmills, too, can be made absolutely self-regulating in operation. The "Toronto" Tower will stand for a lifetime because it is the heaviest, strongest and best-braced one built for easy windmill. See this new Mill now—or get my booklet.

Jack Frost's Doings.

An egg expands when it is frozen and breaks its shell. Apples contract so much that a full barrel will shrink until the top layer is a foot below the chine. When the frost is drawn out the apples assume their normal size and fill the barrel again.

Certain varieties are not appreciably injured by being frozen if the frost is drawn out gradually. Apples will carry safely in a refrigerating car while the mercury is registering fully 20 degrees below zero.

Potatoes, being so largely composed of water, are easily frozen. Once touched by frost they are ruined.

Faust.

Goethe took fifty years over his famous dramatic poem, "Faust"; he was a young man when he began it; he cast and re-cast it, and he finished the second part only just before his death in 1832.

From Small Beginnings.

Missionary beginnings have been marked by many discouragements. Dr. Robert Laws, of Livingstonia, Africa, balanced assets and liabilities after the first five years in that mission. On one side he was able to count one convert, but against this there were five Edropeans graves, five years' hardship, and an expense of -100,000. But what a difference to-day! Before the missionary arrived Nyasaland was a vast region where cruelty, witchcraft, drunkenness and bloodshec terrorized the people. "We want sleep," they cried as Livingston came acquainted with them. Men now carry spears but it is to ward off wild beasts. Women and children are not afraid to sleep or travel the bush paths. They are now sending missionaries to other parts of Africa and the Mission Press turns out 30,000 bo ks and pamphlets a year in eight languages.

DUE TO GLACIERS.

Professor's Explanation of Richness of Mid-West Soil.

Farmers living in the fertile valley of the Middle West of America may attribute their rich crop yields, fat swine and excellent butter to the fact that more than 50,000 years ago their acres were covered with ice.

This is the gist of the finding of Prof. William H Haas of the geology department of Northwestern University, who has made a study of the subject, concerning his observations upon Ohio.

Comparing the glaciated section of the continent and the driftless area Prof. Haas found that the soils in the two differed. In the glaciated land the soils are more diversified and of better quality, he states.

"With this asset it is little wonder that the farmer living in the zone which aeons ago had been covered with ice, should find himself better off than his brother of the driftless area," says Prof. Haas. "This area covers some 10,000 square miles and embraces northwestern Illinois, a small part of Iowa, southwestern Wisconsin and Minnesota."

The geologist, in explaining the action of the ice and why that portion of the earth's surface touched by it should yield to man an abundance of crops, said that the pressure exercised by the glaciers 50,000 years ago crushed the rocks and mixed the dirt as they rolled southward; hence the many soils.

"It is remarkable," said Prof. Haas, speaking of Ohio, "to notice how, suddenly, the tall corn will end and be neighbored by stunted stalks and shriveled ears.

"All this is on account of the fact that hundreds of centuries ago some rocks of a particular hardness, able to withstand the onward sweep of the ice fields from the north, deflected the fields, thus leaving the area which the rocks appeared to protect, unglaciated. That, in my opinion at least, accounts for those 10,000 square miles of comparatively poor soil, or, as we geologists say, the driftless area."

Prof. Haas stated that the demarcation between the healthy grain and the sickly, stunted grain was so distinct as to form a well-defined line showing the boundary between the glaciated and non-glaciated land.

Prof. Haas explained that many authorities do not hold to this view, professing themselves unable to account for the driftless area; others, he said, went so far as to question the existence of the so-called driftless area.

The Northwestern professor declared that the glaciers accomplished three great effects; they cut down the hills and filled in the valleys; they ground up the boulders, and, thirdly, mixed the rocks.

Magna Charta.

Last year 14,000 persons were made happy by being permitted to see the famous charter of British rights in the British Museum. Heavy green blinds are kept over the precious parchment to exclude the full light rays, and thus prevent deterioration, but are lifted to show the charter to admiring pilgrims, among whom are many American visitors to London.

OLD MYSTERY SOLVED

ARCHDUKE RUDOLPH OF AUSTRIA A SUICIDE.

Empress Eugenie Heard the True Story From Empress Elizabeth, and the French Woman Made It Known to the World—Heir to Throne Could Not Give Up Woman He Loved.

Undoubtedly the greatest royal mystery of modern times is that concerning the death, thirty-four years ago, of the Austrian Archduke Rudolph and the beautiful Marie Vetsera in the hunting lodge at Mayerling, near Vienna. Hundreds of newspaper articles have been written on the subject and books and plays have been inspired by the tragedy. There never was an official statement issued by the Austrian emperor nor by any of the companions of the archduke on that fatal night. In consequence, there have been innumerable stories set afloat. That Rudolph met death through violence was the central fact never disputed, but had the archduke been murdered, or did he commit suicide? Did he first slay his sweetheart and then destroy himself? One widely accepted theory was that the archduke had been murdered by Count Waldseden, who loved the girl and had sought to marry her, and that Marie, in despair, had taken her own life. Then there was a story which envisaged a drunken revel at the lodge, in the course of which the archduke had been slain with a champagne bottle. The Italian Ambassador at Vienna, one of the few who saw the archduke's body, said that there was a wound in the head such as might have been made by a heavy bottle or club.

Now comes the true story in the Paris Temps of recent date. It is vouched for by M. Maurice Paleologue, former French Ambassador at France to Russia. His information came from the former Empress Eugenie, whose source of information was the Empress Elizabeth of Austria, the mother of the archduke. Unless the empress was herself deceived, which seems highly improbable, there is every reason to accept as final and authentic the story that M. Paleologue tells. It appears that the relations between Rudolph and the charming Marie had become a public scandal and had enraged the emperor who finally summoned his son to his presence and after a furious altercation told him he must either give up the girl or give up his family. Rudolph finally consented, but said that he must have a farewell interview with the baroness, whom he was to meet that night at the hunting lodge. The emperor agreed and it was understood between them that the son would never see the lady again.

When Rudolph left he summoned a cabman named Bratfisch, a well-known Vienna character, whose name has figured in all accounts of the case, and drove off to Mayerling, a distance of fifteen miles. When he arrived at the hunting lodge he found there Prince Philippi of Coburg, brother of King Ferdinand of Bulgaria; Count Hoyes, brother of the former Ambassador of Austria to France, and Marie. They dined quietly. There was little drinking and the only entertainment was provided by Bratfisch, who had a reputation for singing and whistling Tyrolian airs. They separated early because they were to hunt in the morning. There was a tremendous interview between Rudolph and Marie, in which he told her that all was at an end. She listened coldly and then told him that she was with child. This revelation drove the young lover nearly out of his mind. Long into the night they talked and raved, and at last decided that life apart was intolerable. Whereupon each wrote a letter, that of the archduke being to his mother, and Rudolph shot Marie. He laid her body on the bed and threw roses over it. Later in the morning he killed himself.

Their apartment was separated from the rest of the lodge and no noise was heard. In the morning when they did not answer to knocks on the door, suspicion was aroused, and their friends climbed into the room to find the bodies and the letters. Theirs was the terrible duty of going to Vienna with the news. The emperor appears to have acted swiftly. The men were sworn to secrecy; the servants were summoned and equally enjoined. Later they were pensioned handsomely on the understanding that they would not gossip. But they knew nothing. The truth of the tragedy was communicated only in the letters which were delivered.

There was a dramatic sequel to the story, which is now told for the first time. The emperor, anxious at once for the soul of his suicide son and that there should be no scandal, communicated with the pope as soon as he heard the news and urged that he should be given Christian burial, though this is denied by the Roman Catholic faith, to all who perish by their own hand. Leo was greatly distressed and consulted with Cardinal Rampolla. The latter was adamant. Rudolph could not have the rites of the church. The pope insisted, however, that he might be given a religious burial in private. The emperor refused this, and said that he would abdicate if a solemn funeral were denied his son. Leo, fearing a scandal, finally yielded, but not before the emperor had learned of the opposition of the cardinal. Years later, when Leo died and everybody expected Rampolla to succeed him, the Cardinal Archbishop of Cracow announced to the College of Cardinals that the election of Rampolla had been vetoed by Franz Josef, who had that right. The election of Pius X. followed.

Asphalt.

Asphalt is a mineral pitch produced by the decomposition of vegetable and animal substances over a long period of time.

Venetian Blinds.

The so-called Venetian blinds first came to Venice from Spain, where they were called "jealousies." The jealous Spanish husband kept his wife in seclusion. She was not allowed to draw up her blinds, but she might peep out through the slits between the laths.

Windmills.

The windmills that once dotted the Belgian landscape and furnished motive power for innumerable operations on Flanders farms are slowly being replaced by more efficient power machinery.

GAVE NO THOUGHT TO PAPA.

Mother Might at Least Have Given Him Warning.

There is a genial fellow of our acquaintance who possesses a daughter—the lucky dog! This particular man is a queer sort of cuss and he has always thought, along with Barrie, that there are only two great epochs in a girl's life. Contrary to all accepted thought upon the subject, marriage is not one of them. The first great event is when the initial recognizable smile ripples into baby laughter; the second when she puts up her hair.

This man we have in mind had made a sort of dream ritual of this latter and had planned a thousand ways in turning the matter over in his inner consciousness how he would invest the ceremony with a thousand little graces, remarks a writer in the Baltimore News. They would talk about it ever so much beforehand and as the day drew near there would be many little backward flights and timorous fears of how it would all turn out. In her childhood days he would often toss her little mane up backward and she, the little minx, would tantalize him in turn by parading before him with a mountain of finespun gold banked on her dainty little head. It was to be a monumental occasion and the poor fellow hugged the thought to himself. They would plan for it as for a lord mayor's ceremonial.

The blow fell, as most blows fall, suddenly, unexpectedly. He went home of an evening, carefree, joyous, to romp with this girl-child as of old. She was going to a party and she was fifteen going on sixteen, and her mother, without a word of preparation for the shock, with a thoughtlessness almost sublime, had borne her off to a hair-dresser, where all the iniquitous rites of that diabolical institution were perpetrated. We doubt very much whether this genial fellow will ever be quite the same—the deepest, the most poignant hurts somehow or other always seem to come out of thoughtlessness and the failure to grasp even faintly the other fellow's point of view. Even fathers have a few temples where they make prayer!

Slows Down Speech.

The well-known British journalist, Sir John Foster Fraser, has enjoyed many curious and amusing experiences. But the funniest of them all was with the lord mayor of a big provincial town. Sir John was down to lecture, and this is how the lord mayor, who rather fancied himself as an orator, introduced him:

"Ladies and gentlemen, the lecturer to whom we are to listen tonight is a gentleman whose name is known in every quarter of the globe. Amid the frozen deserts of Siberia, the hill-tops of the Himalayas, the grim regions of Tibet—there is, in fact, no quarter of the earth, north, south, east, west, where his name is not known and respected. Ladies and gentlemen, I have much pleasure in introducing to you Mr.—er—Mr.—er—er—Mr. John Foster.

Feeding the Mummies.

The famous Keeper of Egyptian Antiquities at the British Museum, Sir Ernest Wallis budge, is a humorist as well as a profound scholar. The other day he told a new story of life at the Museum.

A party of solemn-looking little boys went up hesitatingly and with perfectly straight faces to one of the most awe-inspiring of the attendants.

"Please," said the most innocent-looking boy, "can you tell us what time the mummies are fed?"

The attendant noted a slow grin beginning to show itself on the face of one of the boys. He was equal to the occasion. Waving the party inside, he called out, "Hurry up, you are just in time."

Condensed Milk Preferred.

Sweetened condensed milk, diluted with hot water, has won a place as a highly esteemed drink among the Chinese of the Swatow district. They prefer this mixture to the excellent fresh milk, containing a high percentage of butterfat, available from the water buffaloes, and other cattle maintained in considerable numbers by the farmers.

Peer's Daughter Joins Army.

Perhaps the first daughter of a peer to become a Salvation Army "Captain" is the Hon. Anne Kinnaird. She is the eldest daughter of Lord Kinnaird, and is only eighteen.

At present she is working at the Salvation Army Women's Training Centre at Clapton, Eng. She has spent the last two years studying how to conduct Bible and prayer classes.

"I left home with my parents' consent to join the Army," Captain Anne Kinnaird told me. "I have not regretted the step, and am hoping soon to take up more important work."

Collapsible Ladder.

A collapsible orchard ladder, made in two sections, is described in Popular Mechanics Magazine. The upper section of the two-part ladder is disposed at an obtuse angle to the lower one, and terminates in a single rail. As this rail is shortened, no damage to the bark is caused when it is adjusted between limbs of fruit tree, and the front portion can pick over a considerable area without having to descend every time the ladder is to be moved.

CABINS IN THE CLOUDS

TO climb 6,875 feet above Lake Louise and to enjoy a cup of tea in delightful surroundings is one of the attractions offered visitors to Lake Louise, Alta. Tea houses on mountain peaks were unheard of a few years ago, but to-day there are at least a dozen of them situated in the Canadian Rockies.

Two of the most picturesque are the "Beehive" on the shores of Lake Agnes, about two miles and a half from the Chateau and the other a rustic log cabin on the top of Mount Fairview. Walking and pony excursions over the mountains in the vicinity of this picturesque lake are among the popular pastimes of visitors from all parts of the globe to "the lakes in the clouds."

From the "Beehive" one can get a perfect view of Mirror Lake and Lake Louise, which, with Lake Agnes, are known as "the lakes in the clouds." This cosy little tea room is owned by Miss B. Dodds and operated during the season by Miss Goddard. Its furnishings are quaint and rustic.

The foodstuffs are delivered every morning by pack pony from the Chateau Lake Louise—even fuel for the cook stoves is transported in this way.

In addition to the tea room there is an attractive assortment of antiques from various parts of the globe, collected during the winter months by Miss Dodds, who usually goes abroad.

There are many surprises of scenic beauty along the trail to the tea room, but perhaps the most interesting fact is that one can obtain a equally delicious home cooking within sight and sound of whistling marmots and squirrels and chipmunks that leap from bough to bough, and often within sight of friendly bears who come close to the kitchen door in search of tasty food.

One of the most interesting trips at Lake Louise is by a narrow, winding path on Mount Fairview to Saddleback Tea Room and Rest House, which is 2,500 feet higher than the Chateau. This quaint little log cabin, situated on Mount Fairview, overlooks Saddleback Mountain, so called because of its rock formation being similar to a saddle. It takes almost two hours by pony to make the trip over a steep zigzag trail, from which can be seen winding streams and rushing brooks thousands of feet below.

This tea room and rest house, like "Beehive," is owned by Miss Dodds and operated by Miss A. E. Whyman. Its surroundings are most artistic and restful. The view of Paradise Valley and Mount Temple from the tea house is one of the finest in the Rockies.

Daily supplies of food and fuel are transported by pack ponies from the Chateau to serve approximately 25 guests a day, who are well rewarded for their journey to the "highest tea house in Canada."

Damaging the Park.

In the Napanee Driving Park, Napanee has one of the finest places of amusement to be found anywhere in Ontario and a splendid asset of the town. The management of the Park are not seeking to make money out of the property and are giving their time freely to the end that the property may become a much better place of amusement and still greater attraction. There is one thing which the management seriously object to and that is the wilful destruction and damaging of the fences, buildings and other property of the Park Association. All this destruction costs good money to replace, money which would serve a more useful purpose in being used to improve the property. Some people, and they are not always thoughtless youngsters, seem to take delight in the destruction and defacing of property when they can do so without being caught. The Park Association has no objection to the park being used for any legitimate pleasure but wilful destruction must cease and any citizen who sees such going on will receive the thanks of the management by reporting the names of the offenders to the secretary when the offenders will be promptly dealt with.

FINN-PERRAULT WEDDING

In the church of the Annunciation, Enterprise, at ten o'clock, Tuesday, September 11th, one of the prettiest of the early fall weddings took place when Miss Nellie, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Perrault, was married to Leo Vincent, third son of the late Mr. and Mrs. P. Finn. In the absence of the pastor, on a visit to his old home in Ireland, Rev. Father Coyle, of St. Mary's cathedral, Kingston, officiated.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father, and looked very sweet and winsome in a tailored suit of blue velour trimmed with grey Russky fur, her blouse was midnight blue Radium lace and with this she wore a picture hat of silver metallic and her corsage bouquet was American Beauty roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her bridesmaid, Miss Evelyn Finn, sister of the groom, in a brown suit heavily braided, and trimmed with Hudson seal, with hat of cocoa brown satin and velvet and carrying carnations and sweetheart roses preceded her to the altar rails where the groom and bride's brother, Theos. Perrault, awaited them.

The organist, Miss Eileen Dillon, played Lohengrin's wedding march and during the signing of the register, Miss Lillian Murphy sang very effectively, "O Perfect Love."

After the nuptial mass the guests accompanied by Rev. Father Coyle, motored to the home of the bride's parents, where over fifty relatives partook of the generous hospitality for which Mr. and Mrs. Perrault have ever been noted. The dining room was very tastefully decorated for the occasion with festoons of pink and white and bowls of autumn blossoms perfumed the air.

The groom's gift to the bride was a substantial cheque, to the bridesmaid, a necklace of "La Reine" pearls, to the groomsman, a pearl tie pin, and to the organist, an engraved bar pin. Testimony of the popularity of the young couple was evidenced by the many valuable gifts and many cheques. The groom who was a graduate of the Ottawa school of telegraphy, and an operator on the C.N.R., was presented a pass as a gift from the company, and he and his bride who travelled in a beautifully beaded blue Canton crepe dress with cord shoes and hat of field mouse grey, left on the International Flyer at 4 p.m. on a trip to Vancouver, bearing with them the good wishes of the entire community.

One of the treats in store for the sportsmph in Rod and Gun in Canada in the October issue is a story by H. G. Duffus on "Bear Hunting up Bute Inlet, B.C." which is written in a particularly readable manner. Bonnycastle Dale has a good article on the "Virginian Deer of Nova Scotia," while an interesting account of ten days' trip in a canoe is contributed by A. David Fraser. Ira F. Ward has a story of a fishing trip in Algonquin Park, and Williams and Martin Hunter have two good stories in this issue. Guns and ammunition is particularly well filled with articles by men such as A. A. Haines, E. T. D. Francis, and R. Leckie-Ewing, all well known to Rod and Gun readers. Robert Page Lincoln, J. W. Winson, and F. H. Wallace have good departments, while "Along the Trapline," edited by M. U. Bates opens again in the October issue. Particular attention has been paid to the several important trap shoots of the Dominion, and accounts of the R.C.R.A. at the Bisley Team in England, a write up of which is given by Major Crowe, the Maritime Trap shoot, and the O.R.A. are all contained in the October issue.

IRELAND'S PARLIAMENT

Members of Free State House Summoned to Meet.

President Cosgrave Has 68 Seats In the New House—All Must Swear Fealty—Most of the Republican Members Are Now In Jail.

DUBLIN, Sept. 17.—The new Parliament will meet on Wednesday. All the members elected have been summoned to attend. The notices to Republicans were addressed, not to the prisons, where most of them are confined, but to their private houses. Their places re-addressed to Eamonn de Valera and his twenty-eight colleagues in the jails.

Some Republicans who are at large in the country came up to Dublin and were supposed to be planning a demonstration when Parliament assembles similar to that registered by Lawrence Ginnell at the opening of the Dail. This plan, however, will be frustrated by a standing order passed toward the end of the last session and not out of the printers' hands. It prescribes that no member can be admitted to the Dail Eireann unless he become a member, according to law. This means that the oath of allegiance is essential; the preliminary oath will not be taken as at the British Parliament on the floor of the House, but beforehand privately in the clerk's office. This is expected to remove all opposition and frustrate plans for a demonstration. Members who are not sworn could be stopped at the outer gate.

The business of the opening day will be the election of a Speaker and a Deputy Speaker, and probably also a President who may make a statement of programme and nominate his Cabinet for the final approval in the absence of the Republican members. President Cosgrave's power will be exactly the same as the new Parliament as in the U.S.

The House, minus 44 republicans, opens this one hundred and nine members among whom President Cosgrave has 68 drilled, hedged and pledged. The embarrassment caused by the absence of nearly one-third the members elected, constituting the second largest party, has disarmed the activities of the peaceable men, who will attempt to establish a working arrangement between the Government and its Republican opponents, and as a initial step will ask for the immediate release of the 259 rebels now in jail.

The demonstration organized in Dublin to welcome President Cosgrave on his return from the League of Nations at Geneva, has proved that all the enthusiasm is not one-sided. The Republicans were during the elections able to fill Dublin's chief wide thoroughfare with thousands of sympathizers. But the Dublin crowds came out in equal thousands to welcome the President, while the organizing committee and the participators in the complimentary banquet included some of the most prominent figures in the commercial and professional life of the capital. The demonstration was recognized as a tribute of admiration and encouragement to the President in his general policy more than for the part he has taken in the League of Nations. The Government's decision to join the League is generally approved, but there is no popular enthusiasm on this score. Public sentiment is accurately expressed by the statement of the Minister of External Affairs, that if the League of Nations does no good, it can do no harm, and as evidence of external status of the Free State and as a source of publicity it is worth the money it will cost.

NO ALBERTA COAL.

Canadian National Railway Resumes Regular Rate on Fuel.

MONTREAL, Sept. 17. — Alberta coal as a competitor with American anthracite appears to be an impossibility, owing to the geographical conditions and the cost of the long haul. As a result, the experimental low rates on the Canadian National Railways have been withdrawn and the rates returned to the ordinary basis, which means possibilities of profit to the railway and the impossibility of hauling the Alberta coal to Ontario to compete with Pennsylvania anthracite.

Reports to this effect were last night confirmed by J. E. Dalrymple, vice-president of the Canadian National Railways in charge of traffic, who made the following statement: "The tariff on coal from Alberta to Ontario points has been advanced $12.70 per net ton of 2,000 pounds. In other words, certain tariffs have been in effect to a limited territory, and it is now proposed to cover points Ottawa and west and Brockville and west at a tariff of $12.70 per ton.

"There has really been no rate in existence," said Mr. Dalrymple, "except that we agreed to handle a limited tonnage of Alberta coal to Ontario points for experimental purposes, to be shipped to certain points in Ontario. That contract, for experimental purposes, has been carried out, with the rate it provided, $7 a ton. The period of the experiment having passed, we have decided to put our rates on coal from the west back to a commercial basis."

CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

Two Eskimos Sentenced to Be Hanged for Murder.

EDMONTON, Sept. 17.—Judge Dubue of the Alberta Courts reached Waterways, end of the A. G. W. Railway, Thursday, completing a 3,500-mile round trip on the edge of the Arctic, to try persons accused of murders and crimes of violence which have no parallel in Arctic history. Corpl. Doak of the R.C.M.P. and a white trader, Otto Binder, were slain, while three Eskimo men, one Eskimo woman and six Eskimo children were slaughtered, in the course of the blood feud which followed the killing by Binder of an Eskimo woman who had been caught in marriage by an Eskimo of another tribe.

The disappointed Eskimo, a "bad man" himself, killed another Eskimo with his spears, in order that he might marry the widow. A tribal council was held, at which the men, urged thereto by the aged sorceress Ekootuk, decided that the slayer, Ahkhak, should be strangled to death. As the feud progressed, the widow herself was slain, and her four-year-old daughter ordered strangled, to prevent her from becoming a charge on the tribe. One young Eskimo man was slain by sixteen-year-old Omiak and Tatamagama, ordered to do so by tribal council.

As a result of the trials, Omiak and Tatamagama are sentenced to death by hanging, on December 7 next. The aged sorceress, who was in the execution by strangulation of Ahkhak, found guilty of manslaughter, was, owing to her age, given a sentence of one year's imprisonment, which she must serve at the police post on Herschel Island.

The judge, with A. E. Cory of Winnipeg as counsel for the defence, and J. B. Howitt of Edmonton as crown prosecutor, left Edmonton early in June, travelling the 1,566 miles to Aklavik by the great waterways of the Northland, his transportation including conveyance by train, power boat, steamer and dog sled. A ten mile portage between Fort Smith and Fitzgerald was made by auto tractor.

Special Constable Gill of Ottawa, named as executioner, accompanied the judicial party north. With him went material for a gallows, since lumber is difficult to obtain on the barren shores of the Arctic.

Neither of the condemned men appeared to take his fate seriously. The youth Omiak, while waiting sentence, following conviction, laughed and joked with everyone on the island. He did not do so after his sentence. On the contrary, two men charged with complicity in the strangling of Ahkhak evinced the greatest delight on being acquitted, insisting on shaking hands with both counsel, and with everybody else in the courtroom except the judge.

FEARFUL EXPERIENCES

Arrival of First Refugees From Stricken Country.

Steamer President Jefferson, With Survivors of Yokohama Earthquake, Arrives at Victoria, B.C.—Many Are Suffering From Grevious Injuries Sustained In the Disaster — Stories of Narrow Escapes.

VICTORIA, B.C., Sept. 17. — The steamer President Jefferson, carrying the first survivors of the Yokohama earthquake, warped into its dock at Victoria, first port of call on the American continent, shortly after 7.30 o'clock Saturday night.

Premier John Oliver of British Columbia and a party representing the Canadian Government, as well as representatives of the United States Public Health Service and officials of the Admiral Orient Line, operating the Jefferson, boarded the vessel at Quarantine.

Previously at the Canadian Government quarantine station at William Head, 23 British and Canadian passengers, a number of them suffering from broken arms and legs, bruises and shock, and others destitute, had been taken from the vessel to remain under care of the Canadian Red Cross as long as necessary. Doctors and nurses met them at the station and escorted them to shore.

The Jefferson carried 155 refugees, representing 13 nationalities. To many of them the arrival on American shores was the occasion of reunion with friends and relatives. To others it meant merely a long wait until "things adjust themselves and we can get back to Japan."

The Jefferson, proceeding swiftly through the Straits of Juan de Fuca, hauled around William Head shortly after five o'clock. Then there was a tedious wait at Quarantine, while Canadian and United States medical officers made careful examination to determine that there were no cases of contagious illness aboard.

At Victoria, Premier Oliver of British Columbia, and an official party, boarded the Jefferson and offered their assistance to the Canadian Government to the passengers. There were a few cases of seriously injured aboard.

A providential hand held the Empress of Australia on an even keel when she was caught in the earthquake and tidal wave which swept Yokohama a mere fortnight before it, according to Rev. Francis G. Gilbert, Boston missionary, who was aboard the vessel in Yokohama harbor when the disturbance came.

Recounting his experience on the Empress of Australia in Yokohama harbor, Rev. Gilbert said:

"It threw the great vessel 25 feet out from the wharf, and in doing so the wire mooring ropes jerked out the heavy mooring pins, and piles of the wharf set in cement. Then barges, some of them oil barges which had been torn loose, 13 or 15 of them altogether, piled around the Empress and took fire, all burning at the same time. At one time the bow of the ship was plunged right through a burning building. Before the vessel could work her way out of this some of the oil barges were pushed down to the water's level. There, with burning oil 16 to 18 inches deep, the flames shot fully 300 feet up in the air. That oil on the water burned for six or seven hours."

Mr. Gilbert asserted that there had been no exaggeration in the reports of damage reaching this continent.

Marvelous stories of narrow escapes were related by many of the women survivors. They told, often with trembling lips, of death from fire, sea or exposure, of rescue of men whose limbs were amputated that they might be freed from debris, and of heroic courage on the part of rescuers, while all the time the trembling fingers picked nervously at their makeshift garments, depicting the awful horror they had seen.

Find No Trace of Convicts.

KINGSTON, Ont., Sept. 17.—Absolutely nothing occurred during the night which would give the searchers for the three convicts from the penitentiary any clue as to the whereabouts of the fugitives. Several parties of guards were through the country, but so far failed to find any trace of the missing men. A report was received to the effect that two men were seen about ten miles from Kingston on the Gananoque highway. They had made their way through to the Howe Island ferry. It was reported that they had fired a shot at a man in a boat. The Provincial Police were notified, and the matter followed up, but no trace of the men could be found.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Sept. 17 — For the first time in about a month live stock salesmen at the Union Stock Yards last week were able to effect a clean-up in the cattle receipts. Total receipts of cattle were slightly in excess of 5,000 head, but there was a noticeable drop of around 800 from the previous week. Heavy steers are in good demand, and the pick of the offering was taken by the packers. A steady market for heavy cattle is looked for this week.

Most of the heavy steers were sold to the packers at from $8.40 to $8.60 a cwt. while, exporters paid from $7.60 to $8. Medium, good steers sold from $6.50 to $6.75. Butcher cows were slightly higher, but there was a slump in the bull. Stockers brought from $5.50 to $7. Inferior quality feeding steers from $4 to $5.

Veal prices were generally little changed, the bulk selling from $9 to $11.50, and heavier kinds from $6 to $8. Grass calves were hard to move at $3 to $4, and some were unsold when trading ended.

Hog prices were lighter, but despite this buyers reduced prices 50c a cwt. on Tuesday. For the rest of the week thick smooths sold at $9.85 fed and watered, while buyers were paying $1 more for select bacon hogs.

Sheep run of lambs was received, and prices strengthened about $1 a cwt. The sheep market was firm, with ewes selling from $4 to $5, rams at $5 to $6.50 a cwt. Good light sheep for butcher purposes sold within a similar range, while heavies and bucks brought from $3.50 to $4.50.

GREETS HIS BRETHREN.

Prince Mingles With His Neighbors In His Western Home.

HIGH RIVER, Alta., Sept. 17.— The special train bearing Lord Renfrew and his party arrived here at five o'clock Sunday evening. The Prince is spending a few holiday at the E.P. ranch, which he purchased during his official visit in September, 1919.

Mounting the cabin of the engine of his special train at Ingolf, Ont., about 130 miles east of Winnipeg, on Saturday, Lord Renfrew temporarily relieved the fireman of his seat and rode in the locomotive for about 25 miles before rejoining his party in the coaches.

Cowboys, ranchers and townspeople of the High River district accorded Lord Renfrew a royal welcome when the train pulled into the depot.

For the first time since his arrival in Canada, the heroic warship on the depot platform to the main street of the town unaccompanied by either secret service men or policemen.

"Say, why shouldn't I greet me?" said the rancher to his secretary, and the police officers were compelled to make a similar reply to welcoming the owner of E.P. ranch from the window of their car.

As Lord Renfrew reached the street, David Crowfoot and Red Cloud, minor chiefs of the Stony Indians from the Morley Reservation, were waiting to greet him. Then he drew about him Stony Indians in perfect English said, "Greetings, Chief Morning Star—your brothers of the Stonies salute you."

Lord Renfrew, apparently nonplussed for a moment for the correct way to return greetings, hesitated, then gravely proffered his hand and said:

"Morning Star is proud to greet his brothers." Those who overheard the conversation applauded heartily, and no one was more pleased than the Indian chiefs.

Lord Renfrew later proceeded to his ranch by motor car.

To Visit Mountain Resort.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 17.—All of Lord Renfrew's holiday in Canada will not be spent on his ranch, as originally planned, it became known last night. The prince and his party have made arrangements to spend their first week-end in Alberta at the Banff Springs Hotel, where they will arrive on Friday afternoon and remain until the following Tuesday morning. It is expected that the prince will indulge in some golfing and swimming, as well as some fishing and a little mountain climbing.

CHAPTER XII.

THE desperadoes were as much astonished as was De Catinat when they found that they had recaptured in this extraordinary manner the messenger whom they had given up for lost.

"A thousand thunders!" cried one. "And this is the man from that devil's brat Latour would make out to be dead!"

"And how came he here?"

"And where is Etienne Arnaud?"

"He has stabbed Etienne, and taken his coat and hat."

"What! While we were all within stone's cast?"

"Aye, there is no other way out of it."

"By my soul," cried old Despard, "I had never much love for old Etienne, and I have emptied a cup of wine with him before now, and I shall see that he has justice. Let us cast these reins round the fellow's neck and hang him upon this tree."

Several pairs of hands were already unbuckling the harness of the dead horse when De Vivonne pushed his way into the little group.

"It is as much as your lives are worth to touch him," said he.

"But he has slain Etienne Arnaud."

"That seems my affair henceforward. Tonight he is the King's messenger. Is the other all safe?"

"Yés, he is here."

"Tie this man and put him in beside him. Unbuckle the traces of the dead horse. So! Now, De Catinat, put your own into the harness. You can mount the box and drive, for we have not very far to go."

The changes were rapidly made. Amos Green was thrust in beside De Catinat, and the carriage was soon rolling up the steep incline which it had come down so precipitately. The American had said not a word since his capture and had remained absolutely stolid; with his hands crossed over his chest while his fate was under discussion. Now that he was alone once more with his comrade, however, he frowned and muttered.

"Those infernal horses!" he grumbled. "Why, an American horse would have taken to the water like a duck. Two over the river, we should have had a clear load to Paris."

"My dear friend," cried De Catinat, laying his manacled hands upon those of his comrade, "how nobly you have stood by me! But how came you there? Never in my life have I been so astonished as when I saw your face."

Amos Green chuckled to himself. "I thought that maybe it would be a surprise to you if you knew who was driving you," said he: "When I was thrown from my horse I lay quiet, partly because it seemed to me to be more healthy to lie than to stand with all those swords clinking in my ears. Then they all got round you, and I rolled into the ditch and crawled across the crossroad in the shadow of the trees and was beside the carriage before ever they knew that I was gone. I saw in a flash that there was only one way by which I could be of help to you. The coachman was leaning round, with his head turned, to see what was going on behind him. I cut with my knife, sprang up on the front wheel and upset the lot."

"And then?"

"I pulled him down into the ditch, and I got into his coat and his hat. I had hardly got the reins before they were all back and bundled you into the conch. I was not afraid of their seeing me, but I was scared lest I should not know which road to take, and so set them on the trail. But they made it easy to me by sending some of their riders in front, so I did well until I saw that by-track and made a run for it."

The guardsman again pressed his comrade's hands. "You have been as true to me as hilt to blade," said he. "It was a bold thought and a bold deed."

"And what now?" asked the American.

"I do not know who these men are, and I do not know whither they are taking us. I fancy that they are taking us to some place where they can shut us up until this business blows over."

"Well, they'll need to be smart about it."

"Why?"

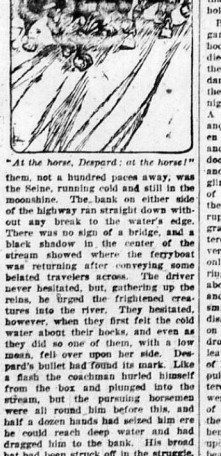
"Else maybe they won't find us when they want us."

"What do you mean?"

For answer the American, with a twist and a wriggle, drew his two hands apart and held them in front of his comrade's face.

"Bless you, it's the first thing they teach the paposes on an Indian war-path! Put your hands out." With a few dexterous twists he loosened De Catinat's bonds until he also was able to slip his hands free. "Now for your feet, if you'll put them up. I fancy that we are easier to catch than to hold."

But at that moment the carriage began to slow down, and the clank of the hoofs of the riders in front of them died suddenly away. Looking through the windows, the prisoners saw a huge, dark building stretching in front of them, so high and so broad that the night shrouded it in upon every side. A great archway hung above each, and the lamps shone on the rude wooden gate studded with ponderous clamps and nails. In the upper part of the door was a small square iron grating, and through this they could catch a glimpse of the glare of a torch and that of a bearded face which looked out at them. De Vivonne, standing in his stirrups, craned his head up toward the grating, so that the two men most interested could hear little of the conversation which followed. They saw only that the horseman held a gold ring up in the air and that the face above, which had begun by shaking and frowning, was now nodding and smiling. An instant later the head disappeared, the door swung open upon screaming hinges, and the carriage drove on into the courtyard beyond, leaving the escort, with the exception of De Vivonne, outside. The latter pulled up, a knot of rough fellows clustered round, and the two prisoners were dragged roughly out. In the light of the torches which flared around them they could see that they were hemmed in by high turreted walls upon every side. A bulky man with a bearded face, the same whom they had seen at the grating, was standing in the centre of the group of armed men issuing his orders.



"At the horse, Despard: at the horse!"

them, not a hundred paces away, was the Seine, running cold and still in the moonshine. The bank on either side of the highway ran straight down without any break to the water's edge. There was no sign of a bridge, and a black shadow in the center of the stream showed where the ferryboat was returning after conveying some belated travelers across. The driver never hesitated, but, gathering up the reins, he urged the frightened creatures into the river. They hesitated however, when they first felt the cold water about their hocks, and even as they did so one of them, with a low moan, fell over upon her side. Despard's bullet had found its mark. Like a flash the coachman hurled himself from the box and plunged into the stream, but the pursuing horsemen were all round him before this, and half a dozen hands had seized him ere he could reach deep water and had dragged him to the bank. His broad hat had been struck off in the struggle, and De Catinat saw his face in the moonshine. "Great heavens!" it was Amos Green.

FIVE YEARS' AGONY ENDED

When He Took "Fruit-a-tives" For Rheumatism

The Medicine Made From Fruit

There can be no doubt that "Fruit-a-tives" is the long sought remedy for Rheumatism and Lumbago. From all over Canada come letters testifying to this fact.

Mr. John E. Guilderson of Parrsboro, N.S. writes: "I suffered badly with Rheumatism for five years—tried different medicines—was treated by doctors in Amherst—and here at home—but the Rheumatism came back.

In 1916, I saw an advertisement for "Fruit-a-tives" and took a box and got relief, so I took them for about six months and the Rheumatism left all gone and I have never felt it since".

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

"To the upper dungeon, Simon!" he cried. "And see that they have two bundles of straw and a loaf of bread and a bottle of water apiece. Now, De Catinat, I have emptied a cup of wine with him before now, and I shall see that he has justice. Let us cast these reins round the fellow's neck and hang him upon this tree."

A bulky man with a bearded face, the same whom they had seen at the grating, was standing in the centre of the group of armed men issuing his orders.

The American raved in the air with his knotted fists. "You think that I'm cracked," he cried, "and, by the eternal, you are enough to make me so! When I say that I sent the bishop I mean that I saw to the job. You remember when I stepped back to your friend the major?"

It was the soldier's turn to grow excited now. "Well?" he cried, gripping the other's arm.

"Well, when we send a scout into the woods, if the matter is worth it, we send a second one at another hour, and so one or other comes back with his hair on. That's the Iroquois fashion, and a good fashion too."

"My God, I believe that you have saved me!"

"I went back to the major then, and I asked him when he was in Paris to pass by the archbishop's door. I showed him this lump of chalk. 'If we've been there,' said I, 'you'll see a great cross on the left side of the doorpost. If there's no cross, then pull the latch and ask the ... if he'll come up to the palace a... as his horses can bring him.' The major started an hour after me. He would be in Paris by half past 10; the bishop would be in his carriage by 11, and he would reach Versailles half an hour ago—that is to say, about half past 12. By the Lord, I think I've driven him off the handle!"

De Catinat spun round the cell now, waving his arms and his legs, with his shadow capering up the wall behind him, distorted in the moonlight.

"Oh, if I could but do something for you!" he exclaimed.

"You can, then. Lie down on that straw and go to sleep."

By persuasions and a little pushing he got his delighted companion on to his couch again and heaped the straw over him to serve as a blanket.

So weary was the young guardsman that it was long past noon and the sun was shining out of a cloudless blue sky before he awoke. For a moment, enveloped as he was in straw, and with the rude arch of the dungeon meeting in four rough bevel groinings above his head, he stared about him in bewilderment. Then in an instant the doings of the day before, his mission, the ambuscade, his imprisonment, all flashed back to him, and he sprang to his feet. His comrade, who had been dozing in the corner, jumped up also at the first movement, with his hand on his knife and a sinister glance directed toward the door.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" said he. "I thought it was the man. They brought their two loaves and a jug of water just about dawn, when I was settling down for a rest."

"And did he say anything?"

"Yes, in the little black one."

"Simon, they called him."

"The same. He laid the things down and was gone. I thought that maybe if he came again we might ... him to stop. Maybe if we got three or four leathers round his ankles it would tell us where we are and what is to be done with us."

"Phew!" What does it matter since our mission is done?"

"It may not matter to you—there's no accounting for tastes—but it matters a good deal to me. I'm not used to sitting in a hole, like a bear in a trap, waiting for what other folk's choose to do with me."

"There's no help but patience, my friend."

"I don't know that. I'd get more help out of a bar and a few pegs."

He opened his coat and took out a short piece of rusted iron and three small, thick pieces of wood, sharpened at one end.

"Where did you get those, then?"

"These are my night's work. The bar is the top one of the grate. I had a job to loosen it, but there it is. The pegs I whittled out of that floor. You see, peg number one goes in here, where I have picked a hole between the stones. Then I've made this other log into a mallet, and with two cracks there it is firm fixed so that you can put your weight on it. Now these two go in the same way into the holes above here. So! Now, you see, you can stand up there and look out of that window without asking too much of your foot joint. Try it."

De Catinat sprang up and looked eagerly out between the bars.

"I do not know the place," said he, shaking his head. "It may be any one of thirty castles which lie upon the south side of Paris and within six or seven leagues of it."

He was dropping back to the floor and put his weight upon the bar. To his amusement it came away in his hand.

"Look, Amos; look!" he cried.

"Ah, you've found it out! Well, I did that during the night. I could make no way with my knife, but when I got the point out of the grate I managed faster. I'll put this one back now, or some of those folk down below may notice that we have got it loose."

"Are they all loose?"

"Only the one at present, but we'll get the other two out during the night. You can take that bar out and work with it while I use my own picker at the other. You see, the stone is soft, and by grinding it you soon make a groove along which you can slip the bar. It will be mighty queer if we can't clear a road for ourselves before morning."

"Well, but even if we could get out into the courtyard where could we turn to then?"

"One thing at a time, friend. Anyway, there is more air in the yard then in here, and when the window is clear we shall soon plan out the rest."

The two comrades did not dare to do any work during the day for fear

they should be surprised by the jailer or observed from without. The instant that night fell they were both up upon the pegs, grinding away at the hard stone and tugging at the bars. It was a rainy night, and there was a sharp thunderstorm, but they could see very well, while the shadow of the arched window prevented their being seen. Before midnight they had loosened one bar, and the other was just beginning to give when some slight noise made them turn their heads, and there was their jailer standing, open mouthed, in the middle of the cell, staring up at them.

It was De Catinat who observed him first, and he sprang down at him in an instant with his bar, but at his movement the man rushed for the door and drew it after him just as the American's tool whizzed past his ear and down the passage.

"It is not worth while to go on," said De Catinat.

"We may as well be doing that as anything else. If my picker had been an inch longer it would have had him. Well, maybe he'll get a stroke or break his neck down those stairs. I've nothing to work with now, but a few rubs with your bar will finish the job. Ah, dear, you are right, and we are fairly treed."

A great hall began to ring in the chateau, and there was a loud buzz of voices and a clatter of feet upon the stones. Hoarse orders were shouted, and there was the sound of turning keys. Five minutes passed, however, and yet another five minutes, without any one appearing.

"Well, I'll have that bar out; after all," said the American at last, rising and stepping over the window. "Anyhow we'll see what all this caterwauling is about." He climbed up on his pegs as he spoke and peeped out.

"Come up!" he cried excitedly to his comrade. "They've got some other game going on here, and they are all a deal too busy to bother their heads about us."

De Catinat clambered up beside him and the two stood staring down into the courtyard. A brazier had been lit at each corner, and the place was thronged with men, many of whom carried torches. The main gate was open, and a carriage, which had apparently just driven in, was standing at a small door immediately in front of their window. A man wearing a plumed hat and enveloped in a riding coat stepped from the carriage and then, turning round, dragged a second person out after him. There was a scuffle, a cry, a shout, and the two figures vanished through the door. As it closed the carriage drove away, the torches and braziers were extinguished, the main gate was closed once more, and all was as quiet as before this sudden interruption.

"Well!" gasped De Catinat. "Is this another king's messenger they've got?"

"There will be lodgings for two more here in a minute," said Amos Green. "Give me your bar again. This thing is giving. It won't take us long to have it out." He set to work furiously, trying to deepen the hole in the stone, through which he hoped to drag the staple. Suddenly he ceased and strained his ears.

"By thunder!" said he. "There's some one working on the other side!"

They both stood listening. There were the thud of hammers, the rasping of a saw and the clatter of wood from the other side of the wall.

"What can they be doing? Can you see them?"

"They are too near the wall."

"I think I can manage," said De Catinat. "I am slighter than you." He pushed his head and neck and half of one shoulder through the gap between the bars, and there he remained until his friend thought that perhaps he had stuck and pulled his legs to extricate him. He writhed back, however, without any difficulty.

"They are building something," he whispered.

"Building!"

"Yes. There are four of them, with a lantern."

"What can they be building, then?"

"It's a shed, I think. I can see four pickets in the ground, and they are fixing four uprights into them."

"Well, we can't get away as long as there are four men just under our window."

"Impossible!"

"But we may as well finish our work for all that."

The gentle scrapings of his iron were drowned amid the noise of hammering and sawing from without. The bar loosened at the end, and he drew it in.

The steady hammering and sawing went forward. It was early morning, and the first cold light was beginning to steal over the courtyard before the work was at last finished and the workmen had left. Then at last the prisoners dared to climb up and to see what it was which had been constructed during the night. It gave them a catch of the breath as they looked at it. It was a scaffold. It was built between two of the walls, and in the center stood a headsman's block.

"I think it is time that we left," said Amos Green. "The window is clear. Let us make a rush for it."

"It is useless. I can see a line of armed men along the further side of the yard. And here come more. See, at the center gate!"

As he spoke the door which faced them opened, and a singular procession filed out. First came two dozen footmen, walking in pairs, all carrying halberds and clad in the same maroon colored livery. After them a huge bearded man, with his tunic off and the sleeves of his coarse shirt rolled up over his elbows, strode along with a great ax over his left shoulder. Behind him, a priest with an open missal pattered forth prayers, and in his shadow was a woman, clad in black, her neck bared, and a black shawl over over her head and drooping in front of her bowed face. Within grip of her walked a tall, thin, fierce faced man, with harsh red features and a great jutting nose. He wore a flat velvet cap with a single eagle feather fastened into it by a diamond clasp, which gleamed in the morning light. But bright as was his gem his dark eyes were brighter still and sparkled from under his bushy brows with a mad brilliancy which bore with it something of menace and of terror.

The woman had faltered at the foot of the scaffold, but the man thrust her on, and two of the followers caught her by either wrist and dragged her forward.

"Oh, Maurice! Maurice!" she screamed. "I am not fit to die! Oh, forgive me, Maurice, as you hope for forgiveness yourself! Maurice! Maurice!" She strove to get toward him, to clutch at his wrist, at his sleeve, but he turned away with his hand on his sword, gazing at her with a face which was all wreathed and contorted with merriment. She turned away and threw back the mantle which had clouded her face.

"Ah, sire!" she cried. "Sire! If you could see me now!"

And at the cry and at the sight of that fair pale face De Catinat, looking down from the window, was stricken as though by a dagger, for there, standing beside the headsman's block, was she who had been the most powerful, as well as the wittiest and the fairest, of the women of France—none other than Francoise de Montespan, so lately the favorite of the king.

CHAPTER XIII.

ON the night upon which such strange chances had befallen his messengers the king sat in his cabinet attended only by Louvois, his minister. There was a tap at the door, and Bontemps peeped in. His countenance was shrivelled, sire."

"Very well, Bontemps. Ask madame to be so good as to step this way. And order the witnesses to assemble in the anteroom."

The valet hastened away. Louis turned to his minister. "I wish you to be one of the witnesses, Louvois."

"To what, sire?"

"To my marriage."

The minister started. "What, sire! Already?"

"Now, Louvois; within five minutes."

"Very good, sire."

There had meanwhile been busy goings-to in the small room where the red lamp burned in front of the Virgin. Francoise de Maintenon stood in the center, a little flush of excitement on her cheeks and an unwonted light in her placid gray eyes. She was clad in a dress of shining white brocade, trimmed and slashed with silver serge and fringed at the throat and arms with costly point lace. There came a discreet tap at the door.

"It is Madame," said Mlle. Nanon. "He says that the king is ready."

"Then we shall not keep him waiting. Come, mademoiselle, and may God shed His blessing upon what we are about to do!"

The little party assembled in the king's anteroom and started from there to the private chapel. In front walked the portly bishop, clad in a green vestment, puffed out with the importance of the function, his missal in his hand and his fingers between the pages at the service de matrimonie. The king and Mme. de Maintenon walked side by side, she quiet and composed, with gentle bearing and downcast eyes, he with a flush on his dark cheeks and a nervous, furtive look in his eyes, like a man who is sure that he is in the midst of one of the great crises of his life. Behind them in solemn silence followed a little group of chosen witnesses. De Jesia, eldest Duc de Chaise, Louvois scowling heavily at the bride, the Marquis de Charmarante, Boutems and Mlle. Nanon.

The torches shed a strong yellow light upon this small band as they advanced slowly through the corridors and salons which led to the chapel. A minute later they were before the altar, and the words were being read which should bind them forever together. As they turned away again, her new ring blazing upon her finger, there was a burst of congratulation around her. The king only said nothing, but he looked at her, and she had no wish that he should say more. She was still calm and pale, but the blood throbbed in her temples.

But a sudden shadow had fallen across her, and a low voice was in her ear. "Remember your promise to the church," it whispered. She started and turned to see the pale, eager face of the Jesuit beside her.

"Your hand has turned cold, Francoise," said Louis. "Let us go, dearest. We have been too long in this dismal church."

Mme. de Montespan had retired to rest, easy in her mind, after receiving the message from her brother. She knew Louis as few others knew him, and she was well aware of that obstinacy in trifles which was one of his characteristics. If he had said that he would be married by the archbishop, then the archbishop it must be. Tonight at least there should be no marriage.

HOW T. B. MAY BE SPREAD

Careful Experiments Made With Cattle and Hogs.

Communication and Destruction of Germs—Not Blown About Like Fog or Vapor—Kept Alive in Manure.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

At a conference of veterinarians engaged in the radication of tuberculosis in live stock, held in Chicago, a valuable paper was read by Dr. Schroeder, Superintendent of the Bureau of Animal Industry at Bethesda, Md., giving the details of the results of experiments which he has conducted during many years on the subject of how tuberculosis is carried from one animal) to another.

The first experiment he described was where two stables were used, designated T and H.

T. B. Germs Destroyed by Air and Sunlight.

Stables held for six years a tuberculous herd of about 20 cattle ranging from cattle that were healthy to those that were in the last stages of generalized tuberculosis. Healthy cattle put into this stable contracted the disease very quickly, and deaths were not uncommon. In stable H a herd of 20 to 30 cattle were kept during the same time, but no case of tuberculosis developed among them. Men employed in stable T were not allowed to use stable H nor were utensils used in T ever taken into H. Dr. Schroeder believes that this experiment is the research of various investigators to the effect "that we have no satisfactory reasons to believe that tubercle bacilli can retain their virulence long enough in tuberculous sputum or other substances to become pulverized sufficiently to be carried about by currents of air and even if this were possible the germs would be so exposed to light in the minute particles which can float in the air that they would speedily die."

Germs Not Blown About Like Fog or Vapor.

Another experiment of a similar character was carried out on a two-acre field which had been divided into three inclosures, each containing a stable 16 feet square. The inclosures were designated A, B and C. A was separated from B by a woven wire fence, C was separated from B by two lines of woven wire fence eight feet apart. Several tuberculous cows, some healthy cattle and some healthy brood sows were placed in stable B. Healthy cattle and healthy brood sows were placed in A and C. At first each inclosure had its special attendant but later one man was given the care of all of them, with the injunction that he should attend to the cattle in the order of C, A, B. If it was necessary to enter A or C after having been in B, he was required to "clean his shoes" in manure. The experiment continued with the one man in charge for seven years. Inclosure B proved to be a dangerous one for both hogs and cattle. A few hogs in A contracted tuberculosis, but none of the cattle, and both hogs and cattle in C remained free. As a conclusion on this experiment, Schroeder says, "Tuberculous infection is a concrete thing, which is not blown from place to place like a mass of fog or vapor. There are many ways in which it can be transported, but they are simple, easily comprehended ways. This is shown by a third experiment, in which had two pastures separated by a small woodland and a cultivated field. A stream flowed from one field called J to the other called K. A herd of tuberculous cattle was placed in J and a healthy herd in K. Several of the cattle in E contracted tuberculosis.

Healthy Cattle Contract the Disease by Contact.

Experiments regarding the danger of allowing healthy cattle to come into contact with diseased ones are quite impressive. Cases were noted of a tuberculous bovine only once or were fed just once on tuberculous milk before it was definitely contracted the disease. Schroeder has two records of healthy bulls contracting tuberculosis while serving tuberculous cows, and many healthy cows contracting the disease during service by tuberculous bulls.

Schroeder's studies show that if healthy cattle are protected from direct contact with virulent tuberculous material or with diseased cattle, the chances of contracting the disease are slight, even nil. For eight years he has been alternating a healthy herd and a diseased herd from stable to stable. In the stable which the diseased cattle were kept is carefully cleaned, but not disinfected, especial care being taken to remove all manure and urine. After a week or ten days the healthy cattle are put in, and the tuberculous cattle put in the stable formerly occupied by the healthy cattle. Both stables are frame structures with earth floors. No cases of tuberculosis have ever developed in the healthy herd.

T. B. Germs and Manure Piles.

Dr. Schroeder closed his paper with this significant statement, "Tubercle bacilli have been proved at the outside to remain alive and virulent in a manure pile, some distance below its surface, for a period upwards of six months, but they will not stay alive, in any pile of manure, unless they are protected by opaque masses of some kind against the action of the light."

Dehorn Early.

Dehorn cattle on any fine dry day when flies do not abound, but not in very cold or very cold weather. The operation should not be performed when a cow is advanced in pregnancy. It is best done after she has recovered from calving.

A "Dry" Scot.

E. Scrymgeour, although he comes from Scotland where most of the whisky is made, is one of the most enthusiastic exponents of prohibition in the British Isles. He is the fighting kind, taking no quarter and asking none. He has been nicknamed "Pussyfoot" after one Pussyfoot Johnson, but Scrymgeour was expounding temperance policies long before Pussyfoot Johnson got into the eye put out in London. The name Pussyfoot doesn't apply anyway to Schrymgeour who, by the way, was the man who defeated Winston Churchill for Dundee in the last British elections.

ORCHID HUNTING.

Men Who Risk Death to Find Rare Flowers.

"Fancy that plant being worth $500!" exclaimed visitors to a recent flower show, as they paused to glance for a moment at the new orchid, Odonto Crispum Solem, with its stiff, snowy petals spotted with maroon. "Fancy paying all that money for it!" But orchids are paid for with human lives as well as with gold. Of all occupations, orchid collecting has the highest death-rate.

A few years ago, eight orchid hunters, working in Madagascar, dined one evening at Tamatave. They arranged to have another reunion dinner the following year. When the appointed day arrived seven of them were dead. The eighth was in hospital. He stayed there for a year, and then sailed for Europe with permanently broken health.

That was unusually hard luck, but every orchid collector knows of many such cases. A collector, a German, who jeered at an idol in a Madagascar jungle village, was soaked in oil and burned to death.

You are always on the brink of the grave while orchid hunting. Invariably these blooms, quickly contested little blossoms, flourish in the unhealthiest depths of the jungle, where fever, snakes, great cats, and ambushed savages with poisoned darts combine to wreak vengeance on the man who violates their privacy.

But orchid hunting is a man's game. We've all seen it in the films and, at all events, we see to it that we do live first. We are up against the real raw stuff of adventure, and we get not know the meaning of boredom. If to-day we have drawn blank, to-morrow we may find a rare Dendrobium growing in a mouldering skull at a hill-tribe's burying ground, or another treasure or two clustering like mistletoe in a cleft at the top of a 90-foot tree.

Secrets of the Earth's Crust.

A very delicate piece of apparatus which can be used for divining the presence of metals under the ground has been invented.

It shows the scientist the way in which gravity varies from point to point at or near the earth's surface.

The instrument has been arranged so that it can easily be taken from place to place, set up on the ground without masonry foundations and used without any shelter except that of a small tent.

A mass of heavy ore, even if buried in the ground, affects the pull of gravity on the instrument if this is placed near it, and affects two plumb bobs differently.

One of these is at a lower level than the other. The two are connected and the system is hung up by a long, fine metal ribbon. The whole arrangement forms what is known as a torsion balance.

The twist in the wire measures the irregularity. The delicacy of gravity caused by the ore bed, by a neighboring hill, a cave beneath the surface, and so on. By a careful study of the results of the experiment it is possible to find the best position for sinking a mine shaft to tap the ore bed.

Oil From Beechnuts.

Not long ago measures were taken by the Minister of Agriculture in Holland to increase the supply of edible oils in that country by raising a full use of the domestic beechnut crop. It is estimated that between 2,000 and 2,500 metric tons of these nuts may be collected annually, which can be made, and that from this amount of raw nuts 300,000 to 400,000 kilos of oil may be obtained. This would be a valuable addition to the stocks of edible oils in the Netherlands.

Owners of private lands from which beechnuts are gathered receive compensation at the rate of 5 per cent. of the sums paid to the gatherers, and they will have the right to purchase cattle cake, prepared from the pulp of the nuts from their property at 50 florins per 100 kilos.—N. Y. Herald.

How Do You Walk?

A woman's character can be told by her walk. A martial tread indicates the soldierly type of woman. An energetic, lively, quick step and short temper are indicated by quick steps.

The fast walker is usually a bustling, busy person, a good house keeper, and one who abhors dirt and dust. No tradesman would ever cheat her.

A soft, timid tread is the step of the clinging, gentle woman, who relies entirely upon her husband. She will be essentially "feminine" and dainty.

Turned-in toes indicate a preoccupied, absent-minded person. Calmness and reserve will be indicated by slow steps, either long or short. A proud and haughty nature is found where the step is measured and slow, with the toes well turned out.

Clerical Curiosities.

The meaning of the word "curate" is nowadays very much different one from that of former times. Previously the curate was the person responsible for the cure of the souls of the parish; to-day he is simply that hard-worked individual, the assistant clergyman.

"Parson" means "person," the parish "persona"; while the "vicar" originally did the work of the parish on behalf of another. At the present time the vicar is he to whom a part of a parish who is not in receipt of great tithes—where, for instance, the tithes belong to a layman.

The original meaning of "clergyman was "clerk," so when we speak of a "clerical error" or an individual whom we now call a "cleric," we are using a word which formerly applied only to the clergy.

Acetylene Gas.

Acetylene gas—which was discovered in 1836, is obtained from a substance named calcium carbide. Formerly this substance could be procured only in small quantities. But about thirty years ago a method of manufacturing it on a comparatively large scale was discovered in England. In consequence of this discovery use has ever since been made of acetylene for illuminating purposes.

When acetylene is mixed with air it is dangerously explosive, but it is asserted that it can be burned without danger when it is under pressure. It is averred that, burned at the rate of five cubic feet per hour, an acetylene gas flame can be made to produce a light of 240 candle power.

Many Remarkable Caves Are to be Found in Britain

Some Have Historic Value

There are some famous caves in Britain, and still more that deserve to be famous, for very little as one might suspect it, the British Isles are rich not only in the number, but also in the variety of type of the cavern which it contains.

Best known among these caves are the Peak Cavern, at Castleton, in Derbyshire, and the Cheddar Caves, in Somerset. The Peak Cavern has been known since the earliest days. No one could help seeing it, for it yawns huge and black in the cliff-like side of that hill on whose dizzy crag Peveril of the Peak had his castle.

An ice-cold stream issues from its limestone recesses, and subterranean lakes stretch far into the hillside. This cavern has been explored for 2,250 feet.

The Cheddar Caves do not advertise in so spectacular a fashion as do the Peak. Cheddar Gorge is one of the most striking pieces of scenery in England. The first series of caves was accidentally discovered in 1837, through a man at work in his garden falling into the hillside. The second series remained unknown until 1899. These limestone caves form a series of beautiful and lofty halls, hung with stalactites from the roof, and with beautifully-colored stalagmites rising from the floor to meet them.

Kirkdale Cave, between Thirsk and Scarborough, was discovered in 1821, and Kent's Cavern, Torquay, in 1824. Both are rich in remains of animals now extinct in Britain, and in relics of prehistoric man.

Kent's Cavern appears to have been known before 1824, however, as at the time of its "discovery" in that year two signatures were found visible through a film of stalatite. These signatures, which can still be seen, are "William Petre, 1571," and "William Hedges of Ireland, Feb. 20, 1688."

Seashore caves are in wonderful variety, from the magnificent Fingal's Cave, in Staffa, on the west coast of Scotland, to the beautiful Lion's Den Cave at Land's End, and the case in the Isle of Stony Cliffe, Purbeck, in Dorset, called "Parson's Barn."

The last named is the largest of several caves on the frontage. It is difficult of entry, its floor being washed by the sea, and a boat and calm weather are required to explore it. Even at high tide it is only 6 feet in Wales, eight miles north of Llandovery, is heard of in wild Welsh legends more frequently than actually seen. One needs the combination of a very expert local guide, considerable disregard for the knees of one's trousers, and a boat of the shape the cave resembles a vast upended telescope with ragged holes in the side and open to the sky.

Wookey Hole, from whom the cave takes its name, was an outlaw famous in Welsh story—a kind of Cymric Dick Turpin or Robin Hood. Legend has it that he and his band lived in this cave, which no horse, or even boat, could now reach.

Wookey Hole, in the valley of the Hamps and Manifold, on the borders of Derbyshire and Staffordshire, can be seen for miles. Its entrance is a great hole 50 feet or cliff-like 500 feet high. When the floor of the cave was dug up, in 1865, a great many relics of prehistoric man and a succession of later occupiers were found.

Near London are a number of caves. For example, there are the long galleries in the Roman Camp at Hurst, running, with their branching passages, for miles. These are of prehistoric origin, and are connected with a number of "Dens holes," sunk from above. The entrance to these caves is in the grounds of Hurst Grange, Berries Hall, close to Chislehurst Station.

Numbers of these Denholes are found in the chalk beside the Thames near Dartford, and it is a matter for guess to whether they were sunk as places of refuge against British pirates, or were dug out by prehistoric man in search of flint.

The most curious cave, or shaft, of this sort is that which exists under the roadway in Boston, where the chief street of that little town crosses. It widens out at the bottom like a bottle. In medieval times a Lincolnshire lady lived and finally perished in it. To-day one may descend less adventurously, a staircase having been constructed.

Artificial Wood.

A Norwegian inventor has, after many years of experiment, discovered a method of making artificial wood.

A mixture consisting of sawdust, together with chalk and some chemicals, is subjected to heavy pressure and the result is a substance possessing all the qualities of timber.

Its specific gravity is the same as that of genuine wood. It is hard to the same as that of oak. It can be planed, sawed, bored, nailed, painted, stained, or polished, and submitted to the action of the carpentry or manufacturer to which real wood is subjected.

It will not deteriorate in water, and, on account of the chemicals it contains, is impervious to rot. Moreover, it only burns at a temperature very much higher than that at which real wood catches fire.

German Translations.

German translations of contemporary foreign writers are very full. Among the English writers who have been translated recently are D. H. Lawrence, Arnold Bennett and G. K. Chesterton, and among American writers are Upton Sinclair, who is more widely esteemed as a novelist in Europe than in America; H. L. Mencken, who has come to be as much a favorite in anything made in Germany, and John Dos Passos, whose novel, "Three Soldiers," is appearing serially in a German Socialist newspaper.—Living Age.

Bath for the Plants.

Your household plants will flourish and bloom if you give them a bath about once a month in water to which ammonia has been added—say a teaspoon to a quart of liquid.

Bride Chanses Sides.

At a church wedding in Holland the bride is given by the editor on the right arm of the groom and goes out on the left side of her husband.

BAFFLING BURGLARS.

some of the Marvels of Modern Safes.

Those who have valuables deposited for safe custody with their bankers do not doubt that they are secure indeed, they do not realize that the continuance of this security involves a never-ending battle of minds between strong-room and safe manufacturers and scientific cracksmen.

Many modern burglars acquired experience of different explosives during the war that has aided them enormously. Before a new method of security has been long in use, some clever criminal will find a way to defeat it, and it is thereby rendered obsolete.

The time has passed since safe-makers produced anything approaching indeed absolutely burglar-proof. Their aim nowadays is to produce a safe or strong-room calculated to hold out against attack for a given length of time.

The longest period that a bank safe, filled with money and clients' valuables, can be left without being visited is that from close of business at the end of the week until Monday morning, or something over forty hours.

If it is absolutely impossible to force an entrance into the safe in that time, plus a good margin for safety, the makers' object will have been attained.

The successor to the key lock is the combination keyless lock, which possesses none of its disadvantages. The combination can be changed as often as desired, and the lock set so that two or more people each with his own secret combination, are necessary to operate it.

Time locks are also frequently used, though more in this country than in Britain. By means of these a safe can be set to keep shut for a definite period of time, during which even possession of the combination will fail to effect an entrance.

The modern safe door has a slab of manganese steel at least two inches thick, as a first line of defence. This offers considerable opposition to liquid explosives and the oxy-hydrogen blowpipe, the deadly weapons of the up-to-date burglar. Behind this are successive layers of force-resisting materials, which are calculated to blunt the longest tools and foil the intruder, if not actually defeat him.

The progress of metallurgical science has been most rapid, and as each new method of attack is revealed it is promptly counteracted and rendered unserviceable.

Those of the public who put their trust in locks, bolts, and bars can rest assured that everything is done by safe-makers to justify their confidence.

Sea Water Cure.

Sea water taken as a medicine is increasing in favor with doctors. In some cases the method of intramuscular injection is considered better.

The preparations used are procured about twenty miles from shore at a depth of thirty fathoms, experience having proved that it is there that sea water is at its best.

Its beneficial properties are derived from the "halogen" salts, it contains in solution, among other things, all the iodine and bromine. Natural purgative; sailors have long appreciated its use.

A haphazard indulgence is not recommended, of course, lest one happen to swallow a few pints while learning to swim, they need not worry, as they will probably be all the better for it.

Strange stories have been told of madness being provoked by drinking sea water. This reaction, however, rarely occurs in cases of shipwrecked sailors with no supplies of fresh water.

FAMOUS BARDWINS.

Namesakes of British Premier Helped to Make History.

Mr. Stanley Baldwin brings a new name to British politics. It is a remarkable fact that we have to go back more than eight hundred years to find a bearer of the name who rose to greatness.

The late Baldwin "boom" was in the twelfth century, an epoch when to live was to fight, when even priests wore armor beneath their vestments.

Such a one was Archbishop Baldwin, who stumped the country with the wily Biraldus, preaching the Crusade. It was he who crowned Count de Lion du Peur and finally buckled on his own armor and himself set sail for the Holy Land.

No fewer than five Baldwins were kings of Jerusalem between 1098 and 1183—an interesting reflection in view of the fact that the new Premier may be called upon to deal with the evacuation of British troops from Palestine!

History had no use for Baldwins for the next six centuries. Presumably they had been engaged further over next pop up across the Atlantic —this time in the role of statesmen.

Abraham Baldwin, born in 1754, was a leading figure in the American Senate early in the last century, and a few years later the name of Robert Baldwin was revered in Canada as that of a statesman who devoted himself to bringing about a better understanding between the English and French settlers.

Matthew Baldwin was an American inventor who made notable improvements in the locomotive steam-engine half a century ago, and James Mark Baldwin is professor of philosophy at Toronto.

So far as the Old World is concerned, the new Prime Minister possesses a monopoly in fame.

Kings of Water Humor.

Kings sometimes have a their speeches written for them. The practice is traditional. It looks, however, as if the old custom would become obsolete before the Prince of Wales ascends the throne for he is rapidly developing into an orator with a good deal of humor.

Recently he gave a short address on England, in which he said:

"The word 'England' suggests different ideas to different Englishmen. The greater part of our juvenile population think of it simply as that portion of the globe which, from time to time, produces eleven good cricketers to play test matches, while to a lot of their elders it seems to stand only for a particularly draughty corner of northwest Europe, much favored as a residence by the influenza germ."

The prince did very much better on the "I own both" than another would have written for him, says an English writer commenting on the address.

London Has Bohemian Club

The Savage Club is renowned the world over as the most Bohemian club imaginable, where, famous or neglected, rich or poor, shabby or elegant, you hang up your hale with your hat in the hall. Among its members, confined to authors, artists, actors, musicians, and scientists, are many of the most remarkable and talented men of the day.

A story is told in illustration of the absolute equality that reigns in the club. A big man with a palatial residence in its own grounds, and a full and adequate sense of what was due to him, had received the honor of knighthood. As was proper and just he hastened, swelling with dignity, to visit the Savage Club and receive congratulations from his fellow-members.

"Now, boys!" he said, "please understand that this new honor conferred upon me by our sovereign makes no earthly difference in our relations. The same old hearty welcome awaits you here, and myself will be just as delighted to see you as in the old days, and you will find me just as willing to—you know the place, 'Vine Court'."

A seedy old fellow in the corner inquired, drowsily: "What number?"

There are many stories told of the "Savages" and the Savage Club in "Recollections of a Savage," by Mr. Edwin A. Ward, the distinguished portrait painter.

Phil May, the artist, was the victim of an ailment — erysipelas—which one can easily be mistaken for, and attributed to, the excesses usually associated with good cheer. Sir James Shannon had painted portraits of all the Savages at least two, including Lord Dewar, the whisky proprietor, about the same time. Phil May suggested that the two portraits should be placed in the Royal Academy, hanging pendant to each other, and entitled "Cause" and "Effect."

A committee of workers once committed the unpardonable sin of hanging a humorous portrait of their late employer. After the presentation ceremony the chairman of the committee called Mr. Ward aside and informed him that they were disappointed in his appearance. "We expected you to look like Lord Rosebery, with long black hair and a big black moustache," said their spokesman.

At another presentation ceremony Mr. Ward had requested the new assistant to remove the curtain from the picture. This was done, and the picture of the sitter, a dignified old gentleman of 70, was revealed to dining on his head with his legs in the air!

James Payn, the novelist, was a man of nimble wit. At a dinner given to Gen. Sir William Butler the guests were assembled in the great hall of the Reform Club (or was it Sidney Smith, as a Tory remarked: "I like your room better than your company") awaiting the arrival of the guest of honor, when Payn, turning to Sir John Robinson, turned to James Payn, saying: "By the way, what is the correct way to address our guest —Sir William or General?"

"Oh," remarked Payn, "Sir William with the sherry, Butler with the port."

At a supper party at the old Beef steak Club the exploits of Dr. Nansen, the explorer, were being extolled. "Yes," said Sir Henry Irving, "a wonderful man, Nansen; they tell me he stands the cold so well."

Mr. Gladstone paid Irving a visit at the Lyceum one evening, and took the opportunity of pulling aside the curtain and having a view of the "house." In his eagerness he gripped the curtain with such energy that not only did he get a clear view of the house, but also presented the audience with an excellent view of the famous features of Mr. Gladstone, upon which they rose as one man, bursting into prolonged calls of "Bravo, Gladstone!"

Irving's secretary one day had a queer little, slipshod Irish maid-of-all-work. She was undersized and unshapely, just an oddity, but her face almost made up for it, and her smile made one forget the unkindness of the Creator in the assembling of her features.

Mrs. Ward (s. L. Clemens), whom Mr. Ward once painted, took to her from the first, and presented her with a complete signed edition of Mark Twain's works. Mr. Ward had been engaged upon a portrait of the Harmsworth brothers, and two or three of the younger ones were frequently wearied by and despatched her upon all sorts of whimsical errands.

When Mark Twain's picture was completed the artist asked the girl what she thought of Mr. Clemens. She signified complete approval, and added: "Wot a relief after them 'Armsworths."

Cod Liver Oil for Cows.

Investigations have shown that the food value of butter is higher during grass feeding in summer than in winter, when roots, hay, and "concentrates" take the place of grass. Cod liver oil is given to some cows during the winter and "it is believed that good evidence of its value in raising the nutritive value of butter has been obtained."

Oldest Log House.

The first known log house, built by white men within the limits of the present State of Colorado, was erected in 1816 for a troop of Spanish cavalry patrolling the Arkansas, near the site of Pueblo.

Old Museum.

The Walden Museum in Prague is a button museum founded by a Bohemian button manufacturer. It is devoted to a collection of dress-fastening devices of all kinds and of all periods.

Tilling the Soil.

Tilling the soil, that ancient occupation so necessary to the existence of the human race, is to-day just as much a necessity as it was in the days of the pioneers. Probably there are more of us to-day who are not engaged in agriculture, but the life of the laborer, the farmer, who must feed those who are employed in other necessary occupations.

Threw Herself at Him.

"I understand she fairly threw herself at him."

"Yes! They met in a motor-car collision."

LIVE IN ONE-ROOM "HOMES."

Poorer Residents of Buenos Ayres Terribly Crowded.

Probably no other city in the world dominates the country of which it is the capital as Buenos Ayres dominates Argentina. Into it is poured all the wealth from the estancias, the great ranches of a great country. There are few other large towns and cities. Unfortunate as this may be from some aspects, it certainly has made a wonderful city which can be surpassed by few in the world for wealth and magnificence.

How a million and a half people can live and do by which owners such a comparatively small space as Buenos Ayres was a wonder to me at first, for the city gives an entire impression of vastness as London or New York or Chicago, or even Philadelphia. The problem was solved when I found that there are many ventillas in which several hundred people live and move and have their being. In these the poor people exist, as a rule, as they are the next-door neighbors to a millionaire's magnificent palace.

On the outside there is nothing remarkable about these conventillas, but as you open the outer door you find that you are in a courtyard, and around it are a series of doors instead of smaller doors. If there are two stories, then a balcony runs around the second story, and as many more doors open on to it. Each of these doors leads to a single room, and in this room I was told lives a whole family — father and mother and children, outsiders, perhaps, and grandchildren. Five or six, it is said, sleep in the same bed, and the cooking is done over a charcoal brasier in the courtyard.

The mild climate, too, allows one to be in the open air much of the time.

Of course, the well-to-do, or even those in fairly moderate circumstances, do not live in a conventilla. The outside of the houses usually presents no remarkable architectural glories, but when you open the outer door you find yourself not in the hallway of a house, as often with us, but in a beautiful patio, or miniature garden, into which all the rooms open. For this climate there is nothing so delightful as such a home as this; a little garden bordered with bright flowers and a little fountain, the cooling spray of which produces a delightful freshness in the middle. Such is the universal architecture of the homes of the rich and well-to-do. —Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., in the Christian Herald.

Vinegar for Long Life.

Is there any connection between vinegar-making and longevity?

"If you want to live to be the old age be a vinegar maker," said one member of a vinegar manufacturing firm. The abnormal longevity of the employees of this firm is well known. Its pure vinegars, sauces, and condiments confirms the statement in a remarkable manner.

In some instances the workmen engaged in the distilling of vinegar have been in the service of their respective firms for between sixty and seventy years.

"The average age of the heads of departments here is seventy!" said an official. "We have three or four generations of a family at work in the vinegar distillery at the same time is quite common."

Recently a birthday dinner party in connection with the firm, the combined ages of four of the guests totalled 325 years. The oldest was nearly seventy and the youngest nearly seventy.

The Story of Uncle Sam.

Uncle Sam is the most popular nickname of the United States.

We all know the jovial, lanky, bearded American with his peculiar top-hat, his voluminous coat, and striped trousers tucked under his boots. How did his name originate?

One account dates from the war of 1812, when there was living in New York a man called Samuel Wilson, commonly referred to as Uncle Sam. His work was to inspect pork and beef bought by the Government.

Elbert Anderson, a contractor, ordered several cases to be addressed to the United States, and signed with his own initials. The employee marked the packages "E.A.—U.S.," and when asked their meaning, replied, jokingly, that obviously they referred to Uncle Sam Wilson, the inspector.

The joke spread, until finally Uncle Sam was understood to stand for the United States.

Transplanting Insects' Heads.

A remarkable experiment has been tried in the biological research laboratory of the Vienna Academy of Sciences in Italy. Walter Finkler, in order to solve certain problems connected with the correlation of body and soul, cut off and exchanged the heads of two species of caterpillars. The head having been lifted out of the thorax socket was severed from the trunk by a simple stroke of the scissors and fixed to the body of the individual treated in the same manner. The blood thus escaping, which, by the state of narcosis, was reduced to a minimum, immediately closed the edges of the wound and, without any seams or other means of fixation, merely in virtue of its natural adhesion, kept the head in the position most suitable for healing.—Scientific American.

The Life of a Fly.

It was said at the Pasteur Institute that the longest life of a fly is about sixty-two days, so that at least three generations are required to last in the world. Fortunately enough, flies which feed on nothing but sugar never lay eggs. Some form of meat or animal food is necessary to them.

Motors in Canada.

Motor vehicles registered in Canada during 1922 averaged 5.7 to every mile of road. The total registration was 513,821, an increase of six per cent. over 1921. Passenger cars for 1922 numbered 462,275, commercial cars 37,610, and motor cycles 9,375 while licenses issued to dealers and manufacturers amounted to 4,561. The last-named cover all styles of cars. Saskatchewan and British Columbia do not compile separately the number of commercial cars registered; these provincial returns are, therefore, included with passenger cars.

In addition to the 462,275 passenger cars registered, tourist cars entered Canada to the number of 818,274 for a period of 24 hours or less; 76,537 for 30 days, and 2,420 for a period of one to six months.

WOMAN SUFFERED FOR MONTHS

Weak and Nervous. Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Webbwood, Ont.—"I was in a very weak and run-down nervous condition, always tired from the time I got up until I went to bed. Sleep did not rest me at all. My sister recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and others told me about it, but it was three months before I took that I took it. It did not take long until I felt stronger, headaches left me and my appetite came back to me. I am a farmer's wife and have many things to do outside the house, such as milking, looking after the poultry, and other chores. I heartily recommend Vegetable Compound to all who have the same trouble I had, for it is a fine medicine for women."—Mrs. PETER BEELER, Hillcrest Farm, Webbwood, Ont.

Another Nervous Woman Finds Relief

Port Huron, Michigan.—"I suffered for two years with pains in my side, and I was nervous all the time. I was weak and just as tired in the morning as when I went to bed. I was sleepy all the day, and didn't feel like doing anything, and was so nervous I could bite my finger nails. One of my friends told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it helped me so much that I soon felt fine."—Mrs. CHARLES BEELER, 501-14th St., Port Huron, Mich.

Women who suffer from any feminine ailment should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. C

NOBLE TECUMSEH.

Here Is an Indian Whom Canadians Should Honor.

Tecumseh, the Indian chief, is one of the most picturesque of Canadian heroes and his death in battle was won by the rising generation. The following is quoted from "Lives of Famous Indian Chiefs," by Norman B. Wood:

"Just before the engagement (Moraviantown) Tecumseh said to the group of chiefs around him: 'Brother warriors, about to enter into an engagement from which I shall never come out — my body will remain on the field of battle.' Immediately he arose and, handing it to a chief, he said: 'When my son becomes a noted warrior and able to wield a sword, give this to him.'

"James, a British historian, said: 'He left a son who, when his father fell, was a mere youth, and fought by his side. The Prince Regent, in 1814, out of respect to the memory of the old, sent out as a present to the young Tecumseh a handsome sword. The son's name was Pugeshashenwa. The Prince Regent also settled upon him an annual pension, which was paid at the Indian's services. He was treated with much respect, because he was the son of his father, and was given a tract of Territory with the remnant of the Shawnee nation'.

Items of interest about Tecumseh that are worthy of note appear. His name still lives, as well it should, in our Canadian memories; his great talents, energy, and life itself, were given to the cause of his race during the war of 1812. He was the greatest Indian the white race has ever known. His equable Fortitude, Diplomacy and strategy, he scorned Gen. Proctor as a weakling and coward, he sternly restrained his warriors from the massacre of women who are cited of white women and children of his American enemies appealing to him for protection rather than fall into the hands of the Sioux, and with prompt response on his part.

It is noble tribute that he should live in our memories but where are the living tribute to the name? Is there no substantial material that shall carry it when our children may forget? Neighboring states are more generous in perpetuating names of heroes, even enemy heroes, like Pontiac, in naming cities and towns. There exists a county in western Ontario, especially on the Thames, where he fell, or, say, facing Detroit, where there is such urban growth, that a million people might bear the name of Tecumseh; there may yet be opportunity, let us hope there will be thoughtful, wise historical societies remembered our Tecumseh, who was the only Indian that ever had the rank of general in a British army, and our brave ally; that, though never Christianized, was a finer pattern of chivalry than many a knight of the white cross that went to the Crusades?

British Wits.

Here are a couple of examples of wit—one Shavian, one Kiplingesque.

One day Mr. G. B. Shaw was visited by Mr. Patrick MacGill, the navvy poet. He had come to interview the playwright for a newspaper, and Mr. Shaw asked him what he was.

"A poet," replied Mr. MacGill; "but I used to be a navvy."

"Ah," said the astute G.B.S, "that you didn't stick to an honest business!"

No. 2.

A lady remarked to Rudyard Kipling:

"Isn't it curious that the word 'sugar' is the only word in which the 's' is sounded like 'sh'?"

"Are you sure?" responded Kipling.

British Electric Ships.

Three vessels of a very unusual character are shortly to be built in a British ship-building yard. Each will be about 400 feet long and specially designed for the fruit-carrying trade. They will be fitted with oil engines of a special type designed in this particular yard for the purpose, and under ocean-going conditions with most satisfactory results. These engines will drive electric generators which will supply current to electric motors placed on short propeller shafts at the stern of the vessel. This arrangement will give greatly increased space for cargo, and is expected to result in a considerable saving in fuel consumption, besides giving great flexibility of control.

Coke and Oil From "Turfa."

The "turfa" of Brazil is described as a soft brown peaty substance that floats on water. From it can be distilled crude oil and scrubber naphtha. The oil is pronounced a very good shade oil. When distilled the turfa shrinks to a third of its original volume, and seems to offer a coke of good fuel value.

Ross Dougan, Newburgh, is putting up a building in which he house the post-office, just one block north of its present location. The reason for the move is that Mr. Quail, in whose building the post office is at present, needs the room to extend his store. The change will not inconvenience the public.

Milo J. Baker, St. Thomas, one of the best known business men died on Monday, of last week, after a lengthy illness, aged sixty-four years. Mr. Baker was born in Enterprise, Addington county, and went to St. Thomas thirty-five years ago as city Grand Trunk ticket agent. He also was ticket agent for the Wabash railroad and many steamship lines.

A very handsome brass tablet in memory of the late Archdeacon Bogert has been presented to St. Mary Magdalene's Church, by his son, Mr. Clarence A. Bogert, and other members of the family. It has been erected on the Sanctuary wall, adjacent to the Altar at which he was the first minister, as he was the incumbent when the present church was built.

Changes have taken place at Newburgh during the past week, which will effect the life of the village considerably. Mr. Neely, reeve, has sold his home to a Mr. Smith, Toronto, and Anson McKeown has sold his corner block, which includes a dwelling house and hall, in which the Free Methodists meet, to George Wartman. Mr. McKeown will move into the house he bought from the late Mrs. James Thomson estate.

PROVINCIAL BYE-ELECTION

To the Editor of The Express:

As another election is inevitable owing to the death of Dr. J. P. Wrosman, member elect, the duty of every voter, male and female, is to consider seriously the obligation of a good citizen and their eternal responsibility to their day and generation and for all generations. If it be true that a government, a leader, a representative, truly reflects the character and quality of the people whom they represent and by whom they were elected, let us take high ground and select men such as have the ability to lead combined with the qualities of statesmanship, a leader for whom we shall have no cause to blush as he may be called to sit in the councils with the great minds of our day.

When H. G. Wells named the six greatest men in history he arrived at his conclusion by making those who contributed most to humanity. Only the names of such live. Those who for selfish purposes and unrighteous ambitions exploited their fellowmen and appropriated to themselves everything that could be appropriated, are soon forgotten or their memory held in contempt through all time. So I would appeal to those who are ambitious for the honors and emolument of office to remember this great truth, "He that would be greatest among you let him be least of all and servant of all."

Stressing Your Fall and Winter Requirements In Terms of Coats, Dresses, Sweaters, and Corsets

PREPAREDNESS

We were never better able to serve you than we are today. Our stocks of ready-to-wear garments have been most carefully selected from the "best" produced in the leading markets of Canada.

We absolutely guarantee that our styles are authentic, that our materials are dependable and that our values are non-surpassable.

THE VOGUE

Simplicity fades into the back-ground before the elaborateness of Winter's Styles. Seldom have we beheld such a wealth of gorgeous fabrics, furs, laces and embroideries. The embroideries for this season are carried out in Chinese effects, the lavish use of Fur Bandings recalls Russia, while laces spell the lure of Spain.

The "tube" silhouette is considered most correct.

Beautiful Fabrics, Elegant Furs, Rich Linings, Weave a Spell of Irresistible Charm Among Winter Coats

The long slenderizing line of the tube silhouette has been accepted as being the most proper of all styles for Women's and Misses' Coats.

Conceived in Paris, its graceful charm quickly crossed the ocean to New York. Canadian manufacturers using this "Tube" silhouette as a proper basis have worked out some truly wonderful creations. Sleeves are important factors in Coats and range from small set-in, through raglan, to deep waist-line arms-eyes. One-button, side-tie fastenings create further features which are more than pleasing.

Unique patterned embroideries, collars and cuffs of Wolfe, Beaver, American Opossum and Fox, stitchings in silk, flat braids and self tuckings are used in numerous artistic ways for further ornamentation.

"Fabrics" are equally as important as style this season, hence much attention has been paid to the question of fabrics.

Our Coat stock this year is featuring: Bolivias, Marvellas, Duvelyns, Duvettes, Velours and Tweeds.

In color, the wood shades ranging from light Sand to Seal Brown are most correct, while London Smoke, Mallard Blue, Navy and Black are being featured for contrast.

WONDERFUL COATS PRICED FROM $31.50 TO $50.00

Women wishing to invest under $50.00 in Winter Coats will be amazed with the styles obtainable.

These Coats run true to all the requirements of Fashion and can be had in a splendid range of materials, especially featuring Duvelyns, Duvettes and Bolivias.

Upon its details hangs its individuality. There must needs be long sleeves, bibs, revers, buttons down the front, cape collars and frilled cuffs.

Our present stock represents an assemblage of hand-picked garments. They came from our best Canadian manufacturers, they are fashionably fashioned from dependable materials.

Never were our offerings more complete. We would welcome an early opportunity of showing you. These values are very outstanding.
